Though beloved by many, the world's most popular web browser, Google Chrome, at times has difficulty deciding what functionalities best suit its users. Ever since the Chrome 71 update, many were disappointed to see the "Mute tab" function replaced with the "Mute site" option, which isn't exactly the same. Gone is the speaker icon in the tab title; you now have to so very time-consumingly righclick (oh, those agonizing milliseconds!) on the tab to get to the "Mute site" option, which is nowhere near as useful. So leave it to the extension developers to deliver us 09e8f5149f

"No shortage of calendaring software, but what makes Lightning so unique is its quick and smooth way of sharing your life." I haven't had to use it much - maybe 5 or 6 times - so I don't really know. But I'd really like to use it - even though I'm not really a "business" user. Why? Well, I was impressed with how quick it was to get up to speed, how easy it is to work with and how focused it is on the specific task. In other words, it really nails what I want. Features: It's cross-platform - portable, PC, Mac, Linux, Windows. Very clean, simple interface. Very easy to view your calendar. Scheduling events is quick and easy. You can even do it programmatically using a script.

I don't need to look anywhere else on the computer for my appointments. You can even schedule recurring events. It's pretty customizable - you can hide things or turn them on and off. I'm a "young bird" when it comes to using computers, but I found the documentation really good. Everything is straightforward and easy to understand. I also like that the web page shows what you can do with the calendar - if you have an interest in that type of thing. Obviously, the calendar can make phone calls, and it's even got a couple of widgets (although I'm not sure what they do). Also, it's good to know that I can export my calendar as a PDF. So it's a good program - not necessarily the best but still good. Have you ever wished you could make a calendar in a flash that you could share with your family or friends? If your answer is yes then you'll love Lightning. Lightning is the easiest way to create calendars in a flash. Just choose the events that you want to add to your calendar, click "add" and they are in your calendar. Lightning is a completely free tool. It allows you to add unlimited numbers of appointments and events and the only drawback is that it's not possible to see all those appointments at once. But you can easily switch between months and you can create multiple calendars. You can also add a picture to your appointment and that picture will be shown when you enter your appointment. You can set your reminders for a particular date and that reminders will be shown in every month. You can create your own theme for your calendar. You can also NooG is a small, but useful application that enables you to quickly find and save your files. However, the program does not support any of the most common document formats such as PDF,.docx,.xlsx, etc. You can find the program on this page. Keep in mind that this is a free version of the full featured product. There are plenty of free online article management tools, but none of them is quite as capable and user friendly as Article Collector. This is probably because the list of features it comes with includes over 30 useful functions. As mentioned before, Article Collector can turn single articles, posts, e-books, PDF files, images, and galleries into comprehensive lists, creating a listing that a user can then edit at any time. For instance, you can get around 30 different sorting options, the ability to personalize the list items, and quickly send it to numerous e-mail addresses in one click. Moreover, the program enables you to add categories, a recommended reading list, upload media, and apply a slideshow to any group of information. There are two main ways you can use it: the first one is to take the article out of its original context and place it in your word processor or blog posting system. This is the most versatile method, since you can then remove the original file if you change your mind later on. With the second method, you can turn the content of your website into an article, e-book, slideshow or a blank page for later use. As a result, you can also arrange the info inside lists, and include images, paragraphs, links, and more. You can choose from a variety of styles to make the articles look more appealing or you can simply keep it simple. The text section allows you to type out a complete sentence, paragraph or line, as well as to paste in an image from your clipboard, a YouTube video, or a pre-written link. Furthermore, you can preview the finished article on your screen, as well as save it to your hard disk, or to PDF, TIFF, HTML, EPUB, or other popular formats. Simple interface Article Collector comes packaged with a very simple interface that gives you the desired control over your listing without asking you to put too much effort into making it look the way you want. The interface can be customized using CSS (Cascading Style Sheet) files, and it comes in three different color schemes. These can be easily changed
