What's New In?

FLV Player Full Screen Software is an incredibly large software with an extremely poor quality. Despite its size, it takes several minutes to download and install, which can be done by any other free of charge software with similar functionality. When installed, it takes the appearance of an application and installs itself in your browser. Furthermore, upon running it, your browser starts loading the buy webpage for the program while the main interface features an annoying additional window intended for, yet again, convincing you to acquire an FLV Player Full Screen Software license. It also uses the Windows Media Player interface, making it less original and more frustrating, if that's even possible. On closer inspection, you learn that the size of the installation kit is due to a tutorial video depicting the full version of the software and the ridiculous time it takes for it to load and play a non-HD FLV file. As the title of the application suggests, the main feature of it relates to its pathetic characteristic of playing the videos in full screen mode. Putting a price tag on anything this pointless and dumb and even pursue the user so forcefully to purchase it is one if not the lowest level of senselessness. You just can't find this much foolishness in a piece of software, just as you rarely find brilliance. The whole idea of this program is absurd and can never be taken seriously. FLV Player Full Screen Software is more than a fluke, it is nonsense. You can try and look at it from every aspect and still can't find its meaning because it doesn't have one. There are so many practical applications out there that can rapidly play your FLV files (in full screen, too) and you should really try them out instead of this riffraff.
